

Search Assist

Several groups have called for Jay Jones to withdraw from the Virginia attorney general race, including the Virginia Law Enforcement Sheriff's Association, the Fraternal Order of Police of Virginia, and the Republican Attorneys General Association. These organizations have condemned his violent text messages and deemed him unfit for office. republicanags.com wjla.com

Groups Calling for Jay Jones to Withdraw

Law Enforcement Organizations

- Virginia Law Enforcement Sheriff's Association: Urged Jones to exit the race, stating they cannot support someone who advocates violence against citizens and law enforcement.
- Fraternal Order of Police of Virginia: Called Jones' rhetoric unacceptable and labeled him unfit for office, demanding his withdrawal.
- Virginia Police Benevolent Association: Stated that voters should consider Jones' character and called for him to take responsibility for his actions.

Political Organizations

- Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA): Led national calls for Jones to drop out after his violent texts became public.
- BradyPAC: Removed Jones from their list of endorsed candidates, indicating a loss of support across party lines.

Political Figures

- Jason Miyares: The Republican incumbent attorney general has called for Jones to withdraw.
- Winsome Earle-Sears: The Republican gubernatorial candidate has also demanded Jones step down.

Additional Context

- Various national media outlets and political commentators have echoed the sentiment that Jones should withdraw due to the nature of his texts, which included violent imagery and threats.

Ask privately

